Then follow Raymond Creek through warm temperate rainforest, to a second set of rock pools and small cascades where we rock hop across Raymond Creek. Walk 100m up a spur through open eucalypt forest reaching the top of the escarpment with sweeping views of the magnificent Snowy River with its beach and rapids far below, and its rolling hills and farmland on the opposite bank. Continue along a rocky narrow track down the spur to the confluence of Raymond Creek and the Snowy River with its lush grassy bank, open bush and cliff face of the escarpment. Basin Creek Falls are directly opposite on the western bank of the Snowy River. Swim in the Snowy River before returning by the same track (now 107 steps up). Walking poles may be useful.
